Radnor Lake State Natural Area is located just south of Metropolitan Nashville. The 1,125-acre area provides a variety of scenic spots and a diverse natural habitats ranging from the lake, to streams and placid sloughs. It even has some of the highest hills in the Nashville Basin. Wildlife is amazingly abundant.

You may observe geese, herons, coots, and other birds as well as many species of salamanders, frogs, snakes, lizards, turtles, and mammals. Literally hundreds of species of wildflowers, mosses, fungi, ferns and other lesser plants as well as trees, shrubs, and vines add to the natural ecological diversity of the area.

Radnor Lake is a state natural area and functions as a sanctuary or environmental preserve. It is a place that provides scenic, biological, geological, and peaceful recreational opportunities not found in other metropolitan areas of its size.

Radnor is located on Otter Creek Road 1/2 mile east of Granny White Pike and 1 1/2 miles west of Franklin Road (U.S. 31.) Motor vehicle access of Otter Creek Road through the Natural Area is limited to handicapped visitors and residents of Otter Creek Road.

Access Fees may apply. Call park for details.
